Asset Management Masterclass or Asset Management Awareness Training?

Start with the role. The right learning follows.

Different roles, different learning needs

The two options cover some of the same asset management theory, but they are designed for different levels of responsibility and application. The simplest way to choose is to start with one question:
What does this person need to do with the knowledge?

Need to lead and integrate asset management across the organisation?

OR

Need focused asset management knowledge for your role?

Choose Asset Management Masterclass

Best for
Senior managers and specialists responsible for defining, implementing, leading or improving asset management.

Why it fits
Provides a holistic view of asset management, with facilitated discussion, peer learning, practical application, coaching and mentoring.

Choose it if
You need to shape direction, make strategic decisions or lead asset management improvement.

Choose Asset Management Awareness Training

Best for
People who need focused asset management knowledge for their role.

Why it fits
Short, self-paced modules can be completed individually or as part of curated role-aligned courses.

Choose it if
You need to close a knowledge gap, support a role transition, refresh knowledge or understand a related discipline.

Still not sure? Start with three questions

01.
What is this person responsible for?
One part of asset management, or bringing the different parts together?

02.
What do they need to do differently?
Build focused understanding, or shape strategy and lead implementation?

03.
What level of application is required?
Focused self-paced learning, or facilitated discussion, coaching and organisation-specific application?

One organisation may need both

A leader responsible for asset management strategy may need the Masterclass, while planners, engineers or supervisors complete Awareness modules aligned to their own responsibilities.

Match the learning to the responsibility.

Not sure which option is the better fit? Pragma Academy can recommend a learning approach based on the person's role, responsibilities and level of involvement in asset management.
